HC02750	Item		Large gasoline engine with transportable buzz saw to cut up firewood	graphic material	Photographer, Herington, Trenton Negative by Richard Lumbers, 1966			[ca. 1912]	1 photograph : b&w ; 15.5 x 10.5 cm		From postcard	A gentleman with his horse and buggy are being photographed with a transportable buzz saw and a large gasoline engine, used at the time to cut up firewood. This engine was built by Charles A. Stickney of St. Paul, Minnesota; circa 1907-1913. It has some unique features such as a large cast iron water hopper attached to the horizontal cylinder with a fuel tank on top of the water hopper. The small can on the right front corner of the wagon looks like a fuel can, but is a unique battery box consisting of a round can with a cast iron top cover and carrying handle. Special partitions within the can held a full set of dry cells, requiring only the connection of two wires to the engine itself. The wagon may be home built from parts found around the farm. Notice the front wheels are steel and the back wheels are wooden spokes and hubs. The uncovered saw blade looks very dangerous, but that's the way they were built back then. The wheel in the centre of the wagon is let through the wagon floor, and has an unknown use. The engine and its features were identified from the book "American Gasolene Engines Since 1872" by C.W. Wendel. -- re Al Cleary, May, 2014
