A work in progress...

Some archival projects are more time-consuming than others. Archives volunteers have been listing the extensive negative collection donated by The Intelligencer newspaper ever since they were donated in 2008, as one example, with no immediate end in sight.

A recent donation of photographic slides created by the late Lloyd Syer (1928-2022), former Director of the Belleville Parks and Recreation Department presents a similar challenge, on a slightly smaller scale.

The slides arrived in September. Some were in carousels, others in plastic sleeves, but the majority were loose in a large plastic bag. The slides had been taken over the course of Lloyd Syer's long career with the City of Belleville, from 1964 to 1990, with a few earlier slides extending back to 1959.

Many of the slides have date stamps, showing the month and year that the slides were developed. This was useful in sorting the slides: we were able to create a grid of years and months into which the slides could be placed. After the slides had been sorted by date, we could then look at the slides for each month and further sort them by topic and sometimes by number.

The initial sorting process took several days, and created some impressively tall piles of slides on the reading room map cabinets.

The next stage is to summarize the contents of the slides. We are now 1,000 slides into this task: many are photographs of parks such as Zwick's and the Corby Rose Garden, while others document park construction projects. There are also a number of aerial photographs of Belleville and several slides of Santa Claus parades in Toronto (1965) and Belleville (1972). We plan to share some of the slides online and in a future newsletter.
