10,000 (twice!)

Four years of scanning and describing our photographic collections bore fruit last month when we uploaded our 10,000th image to the Community Archives' Flickr account. In the last three years we have also described 10,000 items in our online archive catalogue, Discover.

More than 1,000 of these archival descriptions include digital copies of records, and this number will continue to grow over time as we continue to digitize our holdings in response to researchers' requests.

New materials are being taken into the Archives all the time, and where possible, we are scanning and sharing them online as they are added to the collection.

Textual items recently added to Discover include digital copies of all of the 19th century directories for Hastings and Belleville, some of which are physically held by other institutions and can now be shared because they are no longer in copyright. By adding PDF files of the directories to Discover, their contents become easily searchable, bringing the names of all the individuals listed into plain view.

What's in the Display Case?

This month, our Young Canada Works summer student, Maggie Doidge, has created a clever composite map of Hastings County to illustrate some of the many maps she has been photographing and adding to our online collections.

Disaster!

In June, neighbouring Northumberland County Archives organized a very hands-on training session on managing disasters and mould with conservator, Kyla Ubbink. The Community Archives now has its own disaster kit, including essential supplies such as blotting paper, polythene sheeting and a mop and bucket!
