Images from Belleville's Centennial year

In 1978, Belleville celebrated its 100th year of being a city. At the time, the Historic Structures Committee of the Hastings County Historical Society was busy researching the history of some of the older buildings in Belleville. This research was used to produce two small volumes of Belleville's Heritage, published in 1978 and 1983.

The Historic Structures Committee enlisted the help of the Belleville Camera Club to take photographs of many of the old houses and commercial buildings. The photographers were: Alex Adams, Ernie Beattie, Molly Bramley, John Feitt, Lloyd Lobb, Gary Sherman, Bill Wilkins and Earl Yateman.

Recently 77 of the negatives taken for this project were discovered in another collection of papers. These have now been scanned and are available for viewing online (see <https://goo.gl/GZhAi3>) through Flickr.

These images make for an interesting record of some of Belleville's most distinctive older buildings as they looked 40 years ago, including some which no longer exist, such as the Hotel Quinte at the northeast corner of Bridge and Pinnacle Streets.

#Archive30

Every day during the month of April the Community Archives took part in a global celebration of archives and archival materials on Twitter. Archives around the world shared images of their collections and their work on particular themes. You can explore all the contributions to this online event through the #Archive30 hashtag:

What's in the Display Case?

In May 1908, Belleville pipe band, the Kilties, left the city for a two-year round-the-world tour. To mark the 110th anniversary of their departure, we've put together an exhibit featuring some of the fascinating photographs they took as they explored the globe.
